Sediment transport primer: estimating bed-material transport in gravel-bed rivers. Gen. Tech. Rep. RMRS-GTR-226. Fort Collins, CO: U.S. Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, Rocky Mountain Research Station. 78 p. Abstract This primer accompanies the release of BAGS, software developed to calculate sediment transport rate in gravel-bed rivers.

Sediment transport primer: estimating bed-material sediment-transport modes: suspended-sediment load and bed-material load. Suspended-sediment load Suspended-sediment load is the clastic (particulate) material that moves through the channel in the water column. These materials, mainly silt and sand, are kept in suspension by the upward flux of turbulence generated at the bed of the channel.

no bedload sampler is used; b) sediment small enough to pass through the bedload sampler's mesh bag; c) sediment in transport above the bedload sampler that is too large to be sampled reliably by the suspended-sediment sampler; and d) material too large to enter the bedload-sampler nozzle.

the gravel. To relate sedimentation of spawning gravel beds to sediment transport, infiltration of fine sediment (12 mm in diameter) into clean gravel beds. bed material size distributions. scour-fill depths. and sediment transport during 10 storm flow events were measured in three streams of north coastal California.

Title: SEDIMENT TRANSPORT IN A GRAVEL-BOTTOMED Stream
Sediment transport in a gravel-bottomed stream located in the Oregon Coast Range was studied to determine the effects of a single layer of large particles (the armour layer) located at the surface of the bed material. The bed load transport system was studied jointly with suspended sediment transport to understand the total transport system.

Sediment transport is the movement of solid particles (), typically due to a combination of gravity acting on the sediment, and/or the movement of the fluid in which the sediment is entrained.
